Venezuela's ambassador to the United States said Saturday that the U.S. must return control of the country's gold. The country has stored some of its 5,000 metric tons of gold reserves at the Federal Reserve Bank in New York for decades. The Trump administration has previously threatened to force the gold to the U.S., saying it doesn't want to be held hostage by Maduro, who has consolidated his power amid the economic crisis. "There's no reason to keep things like that at the Bank of New York, that are the property of the Venezuelan people," Venezuelan Ambassador Jorge Arreaza told Bloomberg. "It's enough that they have the gold, we want control of it." "There are urgent measures taken by the Venezuelan people to recover their resources," Arreaza said f678ea9f9e
